WORKSPACE & WINDOWS 8: MINOR ISSUES

If customers call with weird issues related to Calendar, Online Storage or Workspace Webmail, it's a good idea to ask which operating system they're using.

There are a few known issues, very minor in scope, produced when customers use our Workspace applications on devices running Windows 8. Our development team is working to resolve these issues as quickly as possible.

Our development team was quick to reach out so we could put together an internal-only Vault article outlining these issues. You're probably thinking: Known issues. Minor. Yeah, right. But we're talking about known issues like:

- The spacing between some characters is unusually large.
- Web-page elements don't display the way they should.
- Customers might have to launch applications from MYA.
- Customers might have to download files to open them.

Minor, yes. But still, those developers have the right idea getting this to our C3 team while they work on these problems. If it helps you on one call alone, the info about this minor stuff will prove invaluable.

Win8 seems to not work well with anything. I hate it. Win7 all day 😊

Why not save devs some time and call these 'Easter Eggs'?

Sounds like a creative solution, Amanda!
